

INSIGHT

T U R K E Y

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

İhsan Dağı

Middle East Technical University

ASSISTANT EDITORS

Şaban Kardeş
TOBB Economy & Technology University

Kıvanç Ulusoy
İstanbul University

Kadir Üstün
SETA DC

MANAGING EDITOR

Ali Ünal
SETA

BOOK REVIEW EDITOR

Talip Küçükcan, SETA

ART DIRECTOR

Mustafa Fuat Er, SETA

SUBSCRIPTION MANAGER

Ümare Yazar, SETA

GRAPHIC DESIGN

Ferhat Babacan

PUBLISHER

SETA Foundation for Political, Economic and Social Research

EDITORIAL BOARD

Meliha Altunışık, Middle East Technical University Bülent Aras, Center for Strategic Research Steven Cook, Council on Foreign Relations Gökhan Çetinsaya, Council of Higher Education Beril Dedeoğlu, Galatasaray University Metin Heper, Bilkent University İbrahim Kalın, Office of Public Diplomacy Ali Karaosmanoğlu, Bilkent University Fuat Keyman, Sabancı University Suat Kınıkloğlu, STRATİM Kemal Kirişçi, Boğaziçi University Stephen Larrabee, RAND Corporation Ian Lesser, The German Marshall Fund Ziya Öniş, Koç University Mesut Özcan, Center for Strategic Research Soli Özel, Kadir Has University Taha Özhan, SETA Walter Posch, SWP Berlin Philip Robins, Oxford University Ömer Taşpınar, National Defense University Dmitri Trenin, The Carnegie Moscow Center Jenny White, Boston University

PRINTING HOUSE: Turkuvaz Matbaacılık Yayıncılık A.Ş., Akpınar Mah. Hasan Basri Cad. No: 4, Sancaktepe, 34885 / İstanbul

ISSN 1302-177X / SET VAKFI İktisadi İşletmesi, 2008

All Rights Reserved.

Insight Turkey is a peer-reviewed journal indexed by the following databases and indexes: Bibliography of Asian Studies, Columbia International Affairs Online (CIAO), EBSCO, Elsevier Bibliographic Databases, European Sources Online (ESO), GALE-Cengage, Gender Studies Database, Index Islamicus, International Bibliography of Book Reviews of Scholarly Literature in the Humanities and Social Sciences (IBR), International Bibliography of Periodical Literature in the Humanities and Social Sciences (IBZ), International Bibliography of the Social Sciences (IBSS), International Political Science Abstracts (IPSA), Lancaster Index to Defence and International Security Literature, Left Index, Middle East & Central Asian Studies, Russian Academy of Sciences Bibliographies, Scopus, Social Services Abstracts, Sociological Abstracts, Worldwide Political Science Abstracts, World Affairs Online (WAO).

EDITORIAL OFFICE

Nenehatun Caddesi No: 66 GOP/Çankaya, 06700 Ankara/Turkey

Tel: +90.312.551-2100 • Fax: +90.312.551-2190

editor@insightturkey.com • www.insightturkey.com

Contents

WINTER 2013 • VOLUME 15 NO. 1

Editor's Note

4

COMMENTARIES

After The Constitution, a New Battle in Egypt

MARINA OTTAWAY

7

New Egypt Versus the Felool: Struggle for Democracy

TAHA ÖZHAN

13

The New Egyptian Constitution: An Outcome of a Complex Political Process

AHMED TAHER

25

From Damascus to Kabul: Any Common Ground between Turkey and Russia?

DMITRI TRENIN

37

Northern Iraq's Oil Chessboard: Energy, Politics and Power

ROBIN M. MILLS

51

Current Developments in Regional Energy Security and Turkey

BUD E. FACKRELL

63

ARTICLES

The Arab Uprisings Two Years On: Ideology, Sectarianism and the Changing Balance of Power in the Middle East

KATERINA DALACOURA

75

Understanding AK Party's Identity Politics: Civilizational
Discourse and its Limitations

BURHANETTİN DURAN

91

The “Ends” of Islamism: Rethinking the Meaning of Islam and the Political

YASİN AKTAY

111

European Views of Turkish Foreign Policy

TALİP KÜÇÜKCAN and MÜJGE KÜÇÜKKELEŞ

127

The Southern Gas Corridor and Turkey’s Role as an Energy Transit

State and Energy Hub

GARETH M. WINROW

145

Fishing for Gas and More in Cypriot Waters

MICHAEL EMERSON

165

BOOK REVIEWS

From Empire to Empire: Jerusalem between Ottoman and British Rule

ABIGAIL JACOBSON

Reviewed by Roberto Mazza

183

Turkey in the 21st Century: Quest for a
New Foreign Policy

ÖZDEN ZEYNEP OKTAV

Reviewed by Emiliano Alessandri

185

Daring and Caution in Turkish Strategic Culture: Republic at Sea

MALİK MUFTI

Reviewed by Elif Özkaragöz

187

Britain and the Muslim World:
Historical Perspectives

GERALD MACLEAN

Reviewed by Nabil Matar

189

Hamidian Palestine: Politics and Society in the District of Jerusalem 1872-1908

JOHANN BÜSSOW

Reviewed by Abdulhamit Kırmızı

191

Intellectuals and Civil Society in the Middle East

MOHAMMED A. BAMYEH

Reviewed by Tauseef Ahmad Parry

193

Building States and Markets, Enterprise
Development in Central Asia

GÜL BERNA ÖZCAN

Reviewed by Sally N. Cummings

195

Thinking International Relations
Differently

ARLENE B. TICKNER and DAVID L. BLANEY

Reviewed by Mehmet Özkan

198

Religions of the Silk Road: Premodern
Patterns of Globalization

RICHARD FOLTZ

Reviewed by Mahmut Aydın

200

REVIEW ARTICLE Reviewed by Laurence Raw

Scramble for the Past: A Study of Archaeology in the Ottoman Empire 1753-1914

ZAINAB BAHRAMI, ZEYNEP ÇELİK,

EDHEM ELDEM

American-Turkish Encounters: Politics and Culture 1830-1989

NUR BİLGE CRISS, SELÇUK ESENBEL,

TONY GREENWOOD, LOUIS MAZZARI

Istanbul: A Cultural History

PETER CLARK

203

EDITOR'S NOTE

İHSAN DAĞI

TWO YEARS AGO the Arab Middle East was shaken by popular uprisings. The events have resulted either in regime change or reforms in some countries, and oppression and violence in others. At the outset the uprisings, which stretched from Tunisia to Libya, Egypt, Yemen and Syria, were hailed as the beginning of a new era in which people power will reign in the Middle East.

Now after two years some doubts have started to be expressed about the process and direction of the change. The Arab Spring has given way to competitive elections, plural political parties and free public debates in Egypt, Tunisia and Libya, yet in Syria it has led to violence, bloodbath and utter destruction.

What we have witnessed in Syria over last two years point to the limits, or at least the costs, of regime change by violent uprisings lightly supported by external actors. It also shows the capacity of the world to bear humanitarian crises. So far it is estimated that around 50,000 people have been killed in Syria, 600,000 have fled to neighboring countries, mainly Turkey, Jordan and Lebanon, and millions are internally displaced. Syria is a country in shambles. War planes of the Assad regime are bombing towns; their tanks shelling the people.

It seems that the Assad regime is consuming itself with violence inflicted on its own people, but the question today is even when the regime gone what will remain of Syria? It is feared that a post-Assad Syria might plunge into another round of civil war. From a Russian perspective Dmitri Trenin of the Carnegie Moscow Center points out this in his commentary: "When the Russians look at Syria at the beginning of 2013, they are focused not so much on the survival of the Assad regime, which they consider essentially doomed, as on the 'Day After,' which appears to them as a huge bloodbath and utter chaos."

It seems by now that the main beneficiaries of the Arab Spring have been the Islamists. As Katerine Dalacoura of the London School of Economics explains while the uprisings have provided the Islamists with some new opportunities it "may have de-legitimized radical Islamist groups because they showed that political change can come about through people power, not violence".

The question is whether "people power" will turn into institutionalized democracy in the post-Arab Spring countries. This depends to a large extent on the vision and wisdom of the political actors who are competing for power in the aftermath of the regime changes. In recent months Egypt has sent rather mixed signals about the capacity of its political actors to build a working plural democracy despite the adoption of a new constitution.

Recognizing that “regime change” is still incomplete Taha Ozhan of the SETA Foundation suggests that “if Egypt has to choose between the ‘growing pains of democratization’ or the ‘military-judiciary tutelage,’ it should not hesitate to pick the first option”. His reasoning is based on a prediction that the “first option offers an exit out of what we may call ‘political turbulence.’ The second option, on the other hand, which we may call ‘bureaucratic oligarchy,’ may clear the path to a Mubarakism that Egypt would be sentenced to for years to come.”

Egypt is indeed the test case, and it has tremendous demonstration effects in the region for the prospects of the Arab Spring to result in stable and plural democratic regimes. This, according to Marina Ottaway of the Woodrow Wilson Center, largely depends on the presence of powerful social and political actors who are capable of deterring the new regime from turning authoritarian: “If secular parties obtain creditable results, even short of winning the majority, there is still hope that the transition will eventually lead to a democratic outcome. If secular parties suffer a resounding defeat, as they did in early 2012, the battle will probably move to the streets, with unpredictable results.” But she does in fact predict a potential result: “Egypt may well slide into a new authoritarianism, punctuated by street protest and violence”.

The prospects for a stable and plural democracy in the Middle East will be a lively debate that we at Insight Turkey will continue to analyze in our future issues.

As you may have noticed by now Insight Turkey has a new design. Without sacrificing the quality of the content we have tried to make the journal more attractive and reader friendly. We will continue to combine policy relevant commentaries with in-depth academic analyses and book reviews. Insight Turkey remains a valuable reference for diplomats, journalists, academics, business persons, politicians as well as just readers who are interested in understanding the events taking place around them. All our readers will continue to find insightful analyses on global events and trends in a more smiling journal.

The “new” Insight Turkey broadens its scope of interest to cover areas going beyond Turkish politics and foreign policy. It will not be merely a “Turkish” Insight but a “global” Insight. We very much hope you will like it. ■